Thanks to the mentoring I had with Lizeth, I received very good feedback on possible improvements on my challenge.

Since I created custom objects for this project, I ended up doing all the formulation from scratch and did not 100% use what Salesforce offers its developers with its standard objects.

This turned out to be the "quickest and easiest" option from a certain perspective, however, by having created a project with this method, it makes it not as scalable and the consequences may not show at first, but later on it would affect the governor limits and complicate future changes.

Additionally, when considering future projects, if I were to share this type of Org with a Salesforce Architect, he would most likely point out that some customizations were unnecessary.

This experience has taught me the importance of making the most of native Salesforce resources. Therefore, I would like to undertake a new similar project on my own, with the intention of minimizing the number of custom objects, to achieve a more efficient solution aligned with best practices.

I deeply appreciate the experience and time that the Liderly team has given us, as well as the opportunity to take this important step in our professional development.
